

Star-studded spirits: Where to sip 10 celebrities' liquor lines

by Hilary Sheinbaum, Special for USA
TODAY | Published on November 5,
2015

Popping bottles and drinking cocktails is leisurely for many, but for these stars, it's business as usual. Famous individuals aren't just lending their faces to spirits for the sake of promotion. Though many well-known personalities are product ambassadors or representatives for various liquors, celebrities are holding ownership and creating brands of booze, too.

Tequila, whisky, vodka, rum — there's a beverage with celebrity status for everyone. From rappers to actors, athletes and country crooners, and just about every kind of talent in between, your favorite icons are sipping on these spirits, and you can toast to sharing the same taste at bars around the country.

Snoop Dogg — Cuca Fresca

A California native known for his rap skills, Snoop Dogg is a shareholder and ambassador for Cuca Fresca cachaça. Snoop Dogg pours Cuca Fresca at every show, hosts bottle signings and works closely with the team on marketing campaigns and product development. The artist fell in love with Brazil (where the spirit is made) and the Caipirinha cocktail (Cachaça with sugar and lime) while shooting his music video for the song 'Beautiful', and has been putting his money where his mouth is ever since. Look for a limited edition version next year in honor of the 2016 Olympics.

Find it at Mandarin Bar in the Mandarin Oriental, Las Vegas.